History:

This high level aviation conference for the Americas was born in the year 2000 in Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic as an IATA initiative to promote an active debate on current industry issues between aviation industry leaders from private sector, policy makers, regulators and airport authorities.

In the year 2002 the conference was associated with the FIDAE Air and Space Show organized by the Chilean Air Force and since that time has received both sponsorship and support of the Chilean Direction of Civil Aviation (DGAC).

In the 2010 version of the event the Chilean DGAC takes on a new role as co-organizer, fostering an even increased participation by the Region's governments in this aviation industry summit for Latin America.

IATA continues to lend their international conference experience and worldwide perspective, converting this conference in a must, for anyone involved in this industry in the Americas.
